The Great Tennessee River Expedition-Arrival at ets Destination-Railroad Connections Destroyed-Attempt on the Mem-phis and Charleston Road-Enlisting Loyal Tennesseeans - Prospects for Imme drate Work.

[Special Correspondence of Cincinnati Gazette.] SAVANNAH. Tenn., March 12.-The greater part of the Tennessee river expedition arrived at Savannah, Hardin county, Tennessee, on the evening and during the night of the 11th instant. As the sun rose over the canebrakes that line the river banks, it disclosed such a scene as neither that nor indeed any river on the continent ever witnessed before. For nearly two miles up and down the stream lay the fleet. More vessels were constantly arriving, the channel was filled with them, guiding about in search of landings near their respective brigade headquarters, and the air was heavy with the murky smoke from hundreds of puffing chimneys.

The shores were covered with the disembarked soldiers, eagerly rushing everywhere and scrutinizing everything, with a genuine Yankee determination to see whatever might be worth seeing "away down here in Dixie."
They early found the canebrakes, and the number of fishing poles carried aboard the boats to be sent up North and used in more peaceful times was something astonishing. Cotton fields were more distant, but long before noon plenty could be heard describing how the fields looked, and exhibiting scraps of cotton and handfuls of seed they had confiscated as specimens from the adjacent warehouses. Officers were galloping over the bottoms, trying to get an idea of the country-not a few privates deemed it their duty to give the mule a little exercise by beating them into a jog trot through the country, too. Half a dozen regiments were brought out on dress parade, and the delighted inhabitants of the pleasant little country town of Savannah crowded into the streets or peeped out behind the surtains of second story windows to see the unwonted sight, and convince their halting faith that, beyond peradventure, the Yankees evere there at least to defend them in their ill-concealed preference for the Union cause. Conspicuous among the troops were the noted Eleventh Indiana and Eighth Missouri, of Gen. Lew. Wallace's Division, whose steady tread and precision of movement were unexceiled by an equally numerous body of regulars our old army ever boasted; and amid all the shouldering and presenting of arms, flashing of swords, waving of banners, prancing of gaily caparisoned horses, and shouting of orders, there came wailing up through this pomp and circumstance of glorious war the unutterable serrow of the Dead March in Saul, as with reversed muskets and measured tread a eye boy to his lonely grave on the banks of the Tennessee. Poor fellow, he had left Paducah, all life and hope; had sickened on the river, and now-well, in a few minutes a regiment was deploying by companies almost over

GEOGRAPHICAL. The expedition had indeed reached the sunny South. We were seventeen miles from the Mississippi line, and only twenty-five or thirty from the northwest corner of Alabama, precisely as far South as the northern line of South Carolina, and farther down than any of our armies, excepting the small ones that have gone around by the sea coast expedition.

SOUTHERN TENNESSEE UNIONISM. There was evidence through the day that the practical Union sentiment along the Tennessee was not wholly a myth. "Reckon dad'll not have to run any more and hide around to keep from bein' hung," was the joyful comment of a hopeless but not uncomely Savannah Miss, as she gazed on the still increasing fleet. "Laws-a-mercy," replied her companion, "I knowed the Yankees was a powerful people, but I never did see so many boats in all my born days before. Guess we will have peace now." More practical was the masculine response to the reappearance of the flag. Some 150 citizens of the town and county volunteered for the war to fill up the Denelson thinned ranks of the Illinois regiments that were the first to embark.

The first movement in the campaign of the Tennessee expedition-General Wallace's division in the field-A hard march and a successful operation. [Special Correspondence Cincinnati Gazette ]

FOUR MILES ABOVE SAVANNAH, TENNESSEE, March 14.-Just in from an exhausting trip into the debatable territory between us and the enemy's forces, I can but realize once more the impossibility of conveying to civilian readers any adequate idea of the hardships service in the field entails. The march of General Wallace's division last night and the night preceding was in no wise different from hundreds of marches the same troops and other troops, all through the seat of war in the West, have made, and yet, common as were its fatigues, but few of the participants will ever appreciate them.

PLAN OF OPERATIONS. The plan of the movement was briefly this At the two towns of Purdy in Tennessee, and Corinth in Mississippi, pretty strong Rebel forces were known to be posted, and between them was direct railroad communication. To attack one was, therefore, to attack both, till the railroad connection could be destroyed. A few miles south of Purdy was an important railroad bridge, with long trestle work on each side. From this bridge a good road led to a landing on the river, four or five miles ahove Savannah. Gen. Wallace was to move up the river after nightfall, so as to throw the Rebel seouts off the scent, move out on the road six or eight miles with his infantry, and meantime send his cavalry shead to destroy the bridge and trestle work, and capture a passing train, if possible. The infantry would be within calling distance to support the cavalry in case of attack, or prevent their being cut off by a movement in the flank or rear.

A SUCCESS-OHIO CAVALRY. The plan was carried out exactly according to the programme. In a night so dark that a rider could only see his horse by the frequent flashes of lightning, and under a pouring rain, Maj. Hayes, with a batallion of the 5th Ohio cavalry, guided by a Union man of the vicinity, marched some twenty-six miles, reached the bridge at an early hour, destroyed it and the track and trestle-work for half a mile, tried to catch the down train from Purdy, but were offed by the conductor's naving been advised by the people of the neighborhood of his presence in time, and got back to the point at which the infantry were resting at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. THE REBELS BURNING THEIR COTTON. For miles an ill-defined lurid glow of light was seen illuminating the murky sky, and shiring dimly through the woods. As it was seen from different positions in the curves of the road, the men imagined each appearance to be a new light, and there was much talk of signal fires and admonitions to be ready for attack any moment; but at last, just at the darkest before daylight, they came up to it, and the mystery was solved. A speculative farmer had bought up some fifty bales of cotton, which were stored in an old shed by the roadside. Late in the preceding evening a battalion of rebel cavalry had been down to the river, and returning, greatly alarmed at the formidable appearance of the fleet, had fired the cotton to prevent the Lincolnites from getting it.

TAKING PRISONERS-SHARP PRACTICE IN PICK-ETING. Throughout the day General Wallace kept scouting parties out around the position of his infantry. The results of their labors were the capture of three rebel privates and one cap-tain, and ascertaining that Gen. Cheatham, with a force that, when all concentrated, amounted to full 15,000, had marched from Purdy the day before to take possession of the very landing at which we had disembarked, (where a high bluff gave a splendid position for artillery to command the river,) and that, foiled in this by our arrival, he was then lying within four and a half miles of our position ! Our brigades were kept constantly changing their places, and if the rebel scouts could make anything of General Wallace's dispositions or numbers they must have possessed extraordinary powers for combinations.

The rebel captain was taken by a Yankee ruse that must have struck him as exceedingly unchivalrio. He was out on picket duty. One of our scouts came suddenly on him at a point where two of his pickets were posted. Fortu-nately the scout was quick witted, or the capture might have been on the other side. "Who are you?" he boldly inquired of the first rebel he reached. "I'm a picket." "Well, so am I, but a little off my post, looking around for the Yankees." "Where's your post?" asked the Captain; "you've no business to be away from it." "Come this way, and I'll show you," responded the scout. The moment he got out of sight of the two privates he quietly informed the officer that he was a picket on the other side, and would have to take him along! And he actually marched the captain in, sword, pistols, shoulder-straps and all.

GEN. CHEATHAM PERTURBED. Gen. Cheatham was se astonished by our unaccountable demonstrations that he never dreamed of attacking us, and actually burnt a little bridge between the positions to prevent us from attacking him.

The Advance of the Expedition Moves into Mississippi-Attempt to Destroy Connections between Charleston and Memphis. Special Correspondence of Cincinnati Gazette ]
TYLER'S LANDING, TISHOMINGO COUNTY, Miss., March 15 .- The National armies have at last made a descent from the North on the Gulf States. I write from the northeast c rner of the Rebel President's own State, and on the opposite shore is Lauderdale county, Alabama.

SHERMAN'S DIVISION ON THE MOVE. At noon resterday Gen. Sherman's entire division moved out from the Savannah landings and steamed up the river, preceded by one of the saucy looking Cincinnati gunboats, the A. O. Tyler. On reaching Pittsburg, where the gunboat engagement was fought a few days ago, the fleet stopped, and after reconnoitering for a moment or two, the gunbeat dropped in a shell on the bluff where the Rebel battery had been posted. There was no response, and glasses showed nothing but utter descrition on the shore, with the same result. Without further detention the fleet moved on, and, a little after three o'clock the division moved out under work. another pouring rain.

PLAN FOR SHERMAN'S MOVEMENT. The plan for this movement, like that for Gen. Wallace's, was to send out the cavalry in advance to destroy a bridge on the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, while the infantry and Charleston Railroad, while the infantry York lines, the Pennsylvania Central and the moved up to support it, and save it from being Grand Trunk, of Canada, are worked up to their danked or cut off.

The cavalry started off at the proper time, but about nine o'clock in the morning they returned. They had got within six miles of the place, when they found a creek so swollen with the recent rains as to be impassable. Meantime the infantry had only got out, with infinite trouble, some three or four miles from the boats. The rain was drenching, and the poor fellows had a hard time of it in their first experience of marching in Mississippi.

RISE IN THE WATERS. The little streams rose so rapidly that the treops had difficulty in returning. A creek that they waded very easily about five in the morning they were compelled to bridge at nine, before they could get back. The artil-lery had great difficulty in crossing at all, the caissons were nearly carried down the stream, and the guns went under and almost mired in the bottom of the creek under six feet water. Some idea of the freshet can be had when I repeat what a pilot told me-that the Tennessee rose eight feet in twenty-four hours.

The movement was a failure, but it was nobody's fault. The elements were against us, and so the Rebels still have uninterrupted communication between Memphis and Charles-THE ADVANCE DIVISION RETURNS FROM MISSISman's fleet came down here in the night. The effort against the Memphis and Charleston Road had failed, and so we united here with Gen. Hurlburt's Division for a more important movement.

The rebels are known to be near us in strong force, and now we have the cheering news that Manassas is evacuated, and the Potomac rebel army can just as well turn up here as not. The old rebel camp here—occupied till the gun-boats shelled them out of it—shows that a considerable force lay at this particular point, and we hear of considerable bodies at Purdy, Corinth, and Florence. And besides, Johnston, Floyd, and Pillow cannot be far off. Our troops are already disembarked, and before morning we are to move. Some rebel prisoners, taken to-day, boast that before two days have passed we'll be driven back into the river, and half our boats sunk. The Baltimore American notices, as one of the worst signs of the times, "the increasing evidence of a purpose to disregard the public sentiment of the border States, but a little time since deemed of the very first importance in regard to every measure that looked to the pre-servation of the Union." The disposition here noticed is confined to those who have chosen for their motto-" No compromise with slaveholders " We had not been in Winchester two hours (says the Wheeling Intelligencer) before Yankeedom was in its element and glory. Some half dozen of the Masschusetts soldiers doffed their knapsacks, and soon oil-cans, files and hammers were in requisition. The old "Potomac" and "Virginia" engines were hauled out and placed in as good running order as possible under the

Sr. Louis, March 27 -A special dispatch to the Republican, dated near Island No. 10, on the evening of the 20th says: Only three shells were thrown by the mortars to-day, to which no re ponse was made by the rebels. This morning Col. Buford sent a reconnoitering party of 20 men of the 27th Illinois regiment down the Missouri shore. They arrested three prominent residents, who report that 2,000 negroes are employed on the island and at the batteries along the shore. That sixty-five of the rebel troops, including three licutenants and forty negroes had been killed by our shells. That the upper shore battery had been abandoned, but others were being rapidly strengthened; that the enemy is 15,000 strong, and that anexample has been moved entirely out of shore. They arrested three prominent residents, their encampment has been moved entirely out of the range of our guns. The rebels, they say, are confident of success, and say they have a good road to Trenton and other points, by which they can escape whenever they choose, and they have plenty of provisions. Three rebel steamers, loaded with troops, were seen watching the shore to prevent communication from here. The total number of the enemy's transports is eleven. WITHOUT METAL PLATE OR CLASPS. DR. S. B. SIGESMOND.

910 Breadway, New York—260 Pennsylvania Average, between 12th and 13th sts., Washington.

Calls the attention of the public to the following advantages of his improved system:

1. The Teeth of his manufacture will never corode nor change color by any soids, being three fourths lighter than any other.

2. No teeth or roots need be extracted, as the artificial ones can be inserted over them.

3. The roots will be made inoffensive, an never eache.

1. No temporary teeth are needed, as permanent enes can be made immediately, thereby preserving the natural expression of the face. Which under the old system is frequently disfigured.

5. This work has been fully tested over five years by many of the first chemists and physicians of this country.

by many of the first chemists and physicians of this country.

Dr. S. has also invented a white undestructive metal filling, with which the most sensitive teeth can be filled without pain, and can build up a perfect, sound tooth on any side roots, which will last through lifetime.
